FOSTERING 21ST CENTURY SKILLS THROUGH ARTS EDUCATION

In an era characterised by rapid advancements in technology and dynamic shifts in the global landscape, the skills essential for post-school success have shifted dramatically. The Arts, frequently underestimated in their capacity for transformation, emerge as an influencer in nurturing a holistic skill set that equips individuals to excel in the world, no matter which career path they choose. Twenty first century, or soft skills, which overlap and interact in all Arts subjects, are derived from current education, industry and community expectations.

Critical thinking and problem solving: Engaging in arts subjects, Drama, Dance, Media, Music and Visual Art, has been correlated with the cultivation of advanced cognitive skills such as critical thinking and problem-solving. When students develop works in an artistic process, they're required to solve problems through questions that have more than one possible resolution. Looking and talking about art with others teach students critical and creative thinking; communication skills and visual literacy. Cognitive operations also grow in a relatively short time specially observing, speculating and reasoning on the basis of evidence (Eggemeyer, 2006). Responding, appraisal, analysis, synthesis and evaluation assessment skills in arts curriculum subjects significantly enhance critical thinking and problem-solving skills, particularly when students are required to analyse others or devise their own, creative intent and viewpoint. Assessment tasks in senior syllabus subjects, are focussed on the creative process, with critical thinking skills essential for success.

Communication and collaboration: All disciplines within the Arts furnish a distinct platform for enriching communication skills, with assessment in these disciplines emphasising collaboration. Collaborative artistic creation nurtures active listening, comprehension of verbal and non-verbal cues, and the ability to work in tandem. Collaborative undertakings necessitate empathy, a respect for diverse viewpoints, and negotiation skills - all of which are indispensable attributes in society and are preferred by employers. These experiences surpass individualism, fostering a sense of solidarity while nurturing interpersonal bonds (Brouillette, 2010). Any day of the week you can walk into the dance or drama studio at your school to see collaboration and communication at work, even more so with arts based extra-curricular programs.

Personal and social aptitudes: The Arts play an essential role in cultivating adaptable, resilient, and culturally astute individuals. Through creative expression, students cultivate mindfulness, self-awareness, and open-mindedness. The Arts instil values of ethical discernment, citizenship, and leadership, fostering conscientious global citizens adept at bridging divides and discovering commonalities. In The Arts and Australian Education: Realising Potential, studies found increases in tolerance and an increase in social perspective-taking for students who saw live theatre performances. Seeing live theatre appears to make students more understanding of and accepting of different people (Ewing, 2010).

Creative thinking: Nurturing creativity is of paramount importance in an era where innovation propels advancement. Arts education fosters curiosity, imagination, and the aptitude to formulate and implement inventive concepts. This creative aptitude is indispensable for addressing intricate challenges. In the words of Pink (2006), The future belongs to a very different kind of person with a very different kind of mind - creators and empathisers, pattern recognisers, and meaning makers.

In a world demanding adaptability, interdisciplinary thinking, and cultural fluency, the arts serve as an invaluable catalyst for preparing young minds. As underscored by Winner, Goldstein, and Lancrin, the arts provide a realm free from definite answers, enabling exploration, experimentation, and introspection. The evolving skill landscape requires dynamic curricula, and arts subjects stand poised (and always have) to deliver active, experiential learning.

Arts education occupies a distinctive position in cultivating these proficiencies. While conventional academic subjects often rely on didactic instruction and passive learning methods, such as rote memorisation, arts education encourages and invites students to be active participants in their learning journey (Gullatt, 2007).

The Education program at HOTA is specifically designed to support the curriculum delivered in our classrooms, with succinct curriculum links, cross-curriculum priorities and general capabilities outlined for each performance, workshop, professional development or event. Developed by educators, this program aims to complement your teaching efforts and enrich the 21st-century skills of your students. While we recognise that not all students engaging with arts education will pursue artistic careers, the skills they acquire - critical thinking, problem-solving, creativity, communication, personal development, and social skills - are invaluable assets for success in any field.

ABOUT THE PERFORMANCE

Greek-Australian poet Luka Lesson draws on his heritage to search unflinchingly for the meanings of love of Ancient Greece. Luka takes us on a journey through the kinds of love: Eros, Filia, Filoxenia, Philautia, Storgi, Pragma and the ultimate: Agapi.

Equal parts rap concert, poetic musical and classical history lesson, Agapi & Other Kinds of Love shows us how love prevails despite the trials and tribulations of the ages.

'What stunned me was the use of contemporary in a traditional storytelling mode. The best part was the way modern and ancient/traditional influences collided into a glorious spectacle of story, song, colour and sound. Simply magical.'

ABOUT THE PERFORMANCE

Written by company founders Hayden Jones and Sam Foster, Fuel explores the ideas of toxic relationships, coercive control, and patriarchal systems.

It follows Seb and Ivy, who are in a new relationship and are crazy about each other. However, what begins as bright young love deteriorates into obsession, control, need and destruction, as we witness their relationship unfold over a 12-month period.

This show takes an honest look at the complex nature of domestic abuse, the psychology behind it, and the broader societal factors that contribute to this troubling epidemic. It weaves together cinematic AV, dynamic sound design, political satire, and psychological drama.

Shannon Molloy is a year 9 student at an all-boys rugby-mad Catholic school in regional Queensland, with a secret that no one can ever find out. Shannon is gay.

Fourteen is the inspirational true story of growing up gay in central Queensland, transformed into a powerful theatre production.

Set to a mixtape of 90s nostalgia, from Shania Twain to The Spice Girls, Fourteen addresses the trials and tribulations of growing up with honesty, humour and heart. ABOUT THE PERFORMANCE

Māui is a dance theatre work that breaks down the characteristics of the Pacific demi-god and dives into the many tales of Māui.

Māui opens with the story of Pacific migration and the stories, myths and legends travelled throughout the Pacific, as our mighty Pacific warriors conquered the largest of all the oceans.

From there, the story is told in chapters, with each scene highlighting a tale of Māui and a characteristic shown through his adventures.

Each chapter has a different tone and uses different crafts to paint the picture of Māui with vivid and beautiful animation being used to push the narrative forward.

ABOUT THE PERFORMANCE

The Scene Project by Queensland Theatre is a premier Education program, inspiring drama students statewide to immerse themselves in the creative performance process, from practice to showcase.

Annually, a playwright crafts an original piece, prompting participating drama troupes to devise a distinct 15-minute rendition. Queensland Theatre professionals lead workshops during rehearsals in schools. This endeavour champions collaboration, recognising students and teachers as artists, fostering confidence, and promoting polished performances.

Culminating at HOTA, local schools unite to exhibit their acts in Theatre 2. Simultaneously, Queensland Theatre actors enact the full play adhering to the

ABOUT THE PERFORMANCE

Step into the enigmatic 'Depository', a once-grand institution now fading. The whimsical last employee persists in an awe-inspiring duty. Using peculiar machines, he extracts tales from abandoned items, safeguarding them in the enchanting 'mother of stories', where all tales reside.

This peculiar and delicate realm teeters as a rogue A.I. attacks, attempting to corrupt the place. Only two improbable companions can rescue the 'Depository' and its stories.

Humanity battles technology in this captivating and amusing clash of analog versus digital. Through vibrant video, computer animations, contraptions, robotics, and flying objects, the line blurs between the real and virtual. WHALEBONE weaves a magical, action-packed narrative exploring humanity and the encroaching artificial intelligence.

THE VALUE OF THE ARTS IN REAL LIFE

Education is a dynamic process that extends far beyond the confines of traditional classrooms. Even by delivering a robust school-based program, experiential learning through exposure to art galleries and live performances is a transformative educational tool for teachers and is critical to quality teaching and learning.

Through their ability to engage a range of senses and expose audiences to works that transcend historical eras, cultures, geographies and social perspectives, arts institutions, such as HOTA profoundly enrich holistic educational approaches. In this way, an education partnership between schools and arts institutions represent the ultimate goal of education; making students active and lifelong participants in the resources of their communities. (Vallance, 2007; Bassam, N., 2012)

Artworks and performance pieces often embody a rich layering of multiple concepts, themes and literacies. In their resolve to communicate, explore and extend real and imagined worlds, viewers are naturally invited to integrate a range of understandings through this experience. From this, we can appreciate that experiencing the arts in first hand contexts opens students up to new ways of seeing, experiencing, and connecting to themselves, others, and the broader world. (NAEA, 2020) In considering this rich and multilayered input, students are affected in ways that cause them meaningful learning by using their minds, senses and bodies to respond to and interpret the themes and literacies presented to them. (Bassam N., 2012)

In the framework of drama for example, we can appreciate the way a live experience allows us to engage with the immediacy and performance energy of the cast, to witness the transformation of character, the quality of language, and the effect and meaning of complex visual imagery' (QCAA, 2019). When compared to experiencing performance through recorded media, research suggests that though watching movies is an extremely common school practice, but it may produce little deep learning. (Greene, et. al., 2018)

In this way, visiting galleries and live performance 'provides ways of engaging those students who were otherwise difficult to engage; connect students to themselves, to each other as well as to the world; transform the learning environment itself, and importantly; challenge those students who were already successful. (Ewing, 2010)

Another fundamental benefit of arts institutions is their provision of Artist Educators or Teaching Artists to support education programs. "A teaching artist is a practicing professional artist with the complementary skills, curiosities and sensibilities of an educator, who can effectively engage a wide range of people in learning experiences in, through, and about the arts." (Booth, 2010, p. 2).

Artist Educators work alongside an institution's education team and when engaging school audiences, deliver learning that spans professional worlds, exposes students to real disciplinary practices, and builds the capacity of the educators they partner with (Wardrip, date unknown). HOTA is proud to provide Artist Educators to actively enrich the learning experiences of students and teachers across a range of programs and initiatives.

Visiting galleries and live performances serve not just to supplement to classroom education; they are integral to a holistic, well-rounded learning experience. Ultimately, arts institutions, such as HOTA, expand education objectives by connecting and stimulating students with to rich artworks in real life contexts, making learning a truly transformative and lifelong journey.

ABOUT THE EXHIBITION

Tackling themes of identity and cultural dislocation in the midpoint between humour and seriousness, Jason Phu's multi-disciplinary practice brings together a wide range of, sometimes contradictory, references. Working across drawing, installation, painting and performance, his work is informed by his experience growing up in Australia as the child of first-generation Chinese Vietnamese immigrants.

The exhibition explores painting as an expanded practice that extends beyond the traditional paint on canvas format to incorporate diverse materials, structures and ideas. This installation serves as a note of caution: a reminder to live in the present and value experiences and relationships over materials and objects.

ABOUT

This workshop takes students through the process of curation as storytelling. Working to a design brief, the task is to explore a work from HOTA's collection and expand out a vision and rationale for an exhibition composition with supporting works. Rich in literacy comprehension and critical thinking, students will expand their justifying and synthesising skills to pitch the concept for a Collections exhibition.
